Cities, like anything else, succeed by making the most of their assets.

Dull, inert cities, it is true, do contain the seeds of their own destruction and little else. But lively, diverse, and intense cities contain the seeds of their own regeneration, with energy enough to carry for problems and needs outside themselves.

From: Jane Jacobs--The Death and Life of Great American Cities.

Wherever cities are thinly settled rather than densely concentrated, or wherever diverse uses occur infrequently, any specific attraction does cause traffic congestion. Such places as clinics, shopping centers or movies bring with them a concentration of traffic—and what is more, bring traffic heavily along the routes to and from them. . . In dense diversified areas, people still walk, an activity that is impractical in the suburbs.

From: Jane Jacobs--The Death and Life of Great American Cities.

Midtown: Milwaukee's historic sanctuary for displaced populations

Historically, Milwaukee's Midtown neighborhood has been a haven for populations on the move—sometimes fleeing threatening circumstances and sometimes losing their homes.

Midtown has a history that deserves notice.

Each edition of Milwaukee Neighborhood Forum will feature a story on one Milwaukee neighborhood

Midtown developed in the last decades of the 19th century. By the 1880s mostly German and working-class families were migrating in from other Milwaukee neighborhoods and building modest frame houses and shops, first along Lisbon Avenue and then on other Midtown blocks. The lots they purchased were narrow and the construction of alley houses added to the population density of the area. Residents lived within walking distance of jobs at tanneries, the Schlitz Brewery, factories, and mills. By 1892 they had built St. Michael's Catholic Church on North 24th Street—a congregation that began with 125 families. Churches of other faiths would follow.

But soon, other populations would arrive. From the turn of the 20th century on, the words on the Statue of Liberty could have applied to the Midtown neighborhood. "Give me your . . ."

Unwed mothers

The pattern more or less began in 1908 when Archbishop Sebastian G. Messmer requested the Reverend Mother St. Cecilia, the superior general of the order of Misericorde of Montreal, to establish a hospital at the location that he was vacating at 22nd and Juneau in favor of the Pabst Mansion downtown. Soon Sisters St. Celestin and St. Fabian arrived to review the site. Shortly after taking ownership, a decision was made to turn the old mansion into Misericordia Hospital for unwed mothers.

Helping unwed mothers remained the main function of the facility until 1923 when the site was enlarged and became an all-around hospital.

German-speaking refugees

The neighborhood once again became a sanctuary at the close of World War Two. St. Michael's Parish that had been organized by the original German settlers in Midtown became a sanctuary site for displaced German-speaking people from Eastern Europe. The Donauschwaben (local Danube Swabian) populations were targeted during World War Two due to hatred of the German leadership. Approximately 250,000 were imprisoned in concentration camps by Yugoslavia's Tito. Many of the remaining Danube Swabians were deported to Russian work camps.

St. Michael's Parish

At the end of the war, several hundred thousand came to America. Milwaukee and St. Michael's became a sanctuary site where the displaced Germans could restart their lives.

Displaced African Americans

In the 1950s and 1960s urban renewal and freeway building uprooted thousands of African Americans from their Bronzeville neighborhood. Over 8,000 homes and scores of family-run businesses were lost. Nearby neighborhoods like Midtown experienced an influx of African Americans who'd lost their village. In Midtown they were able to form an active neighborhood association and begin a new north side community.

Homeless and refugees/asylees

In 1968, Michael and Annette Cullen and the Milwaukee branch of the Catholic Worker movement opened the Casa Maria house in the Midtown neighborhood. The site, which eventually expanded to four houses on the block, became a shelter for homeless families and refugees. The Casa Maria organization, comprised of all volunteers without government support, was also a wellspring of social action for the area, spawning the city's first Montessori School (Highland Community School), the St. Ben's Meal Program for families in poverty, and the now-defunct West Side Housing Cooperative.

People seeking asylum or housing have been served in many ways. They can access short- and long-term shelter from the Casa Maria organization, and assistance of food, clothing, and furniture for those seeking independent housing.

Southeast Asian refugees

St. Michael's Parish, which had become a sanctuary to the Danube Swabians at the close of World War Two, has more recently become a sanctuary for Southeast Asians. Hundreds of thousands of Hmong, who faced genocide at the close of the Vietnam War, came to the United States late in the 20th century. Milwaukee became a primary and secondary migration area, and St. Michael's welcomed them to the Midtown area, offering them social services and masses in Hmong.

More recently, the parish has opened its doors to recent immigrants from Myanmar (formerly Burma), who have arrived in Milwaukee, escaping conflict and discrimination in their native country. The parish also offers services and mass in Spanish to accommodate Midtown's Latino population.

Midtown faced urban renewal

In 1969, the Midtown Conservation Project began as an urban renewal program. However, many residents of the (now-defunct)

Midtown Neighborhood Association recalled the loss of community in other Milwaukee neighborhoods, and placed limitations on the amount of clearance they would tolerate. They sought a balance between block clearance/redevelopment and preservation. The project provided nearly $1,000,000 in grants and low-interest loans for property improvements, resulting in the rehabilitation of approximately 650 buildings.

However, nearly half the buildings in Midtown were demolished with redevelopment on the cleared space. The neighborhood ended up with widened streets, improved infrastructure, and new housing units. But significant history was also lost. This included an apartment complex on 27th and Highland that had been designed by famed architect Frank Lloyd Wright.

Today a sanctuary for residents

In 1977, Misericordia Hospital closed. The buildings were demolished in 1982 and the square block area, bordered by 22nd and 23rd Streets and Juneau and McKinley Avenues, began to take on an identity of itself--known as Lynden Hill. Resident members of the (now-defunct) Midtown Neighborhood Association wanted to keep the area as an open green space. The sloping hill and expansive space had become home to over 50 trees and was a natural amphitheater. In 1999, Lynden Hill was designated as the site for Milwaukee's Urban Tree House, an environmental education project of the USDA Forest Service. Two years later, the organization secured a lease from the city to maintain the open green space.

Lynden Hill is one of five Urban Tree House sites in the United States. The national Urban Tree House program was founded for the purpose of educating city youth on the natural environment, and increase their interest in natural resources and potential careers.

Russo. But as the young anthropologists translate and transcribe the journal, they learn that Giuseppe had been banished from his former community in the Third Ward. Are they about to stumble on information that could kill the project—or something perhaps even worse?

The Fabled Theft at Kozy Park

The anthropologists at City Anthropology were asked to use their research skills to look into a man's confession that might solve the longest unsolved mystery on Milwaukee's old South Side—the theft of the squirrel lady statue at Kozy Park. According to reports, the man Raf (now deceased) also implicated members of a local Polish club with an agenda of removing non-Polish influences from the neighborhood. Assigned to the project, Enid and Meyer are baffled by the information they are getting from those who witnessed the confession, little of which supports Raf's story. Further inquiry points to events surrounding Raf's stepson. Who really was he and why did he inexplicably appear on the scene all those years ago? Their quest for answers leads them to the club in question, but with unexpected results. The ultimate mystery they must solve is the true reason why Raf made this confession and steered them to a list of alleged conspirators.

The Shop on King Drive

A mystery arises out of the ruins of urban renewal. Two young anthropologists, conducting research to develop a museum that would illuminate one dark period in Milwaukee's central city history, confront painful but sometimes puzzling accounts. During the 1950s and 1960s, over 8,000 homes and an entire business district of the African American Bronzeville community were razed. The research demonstrated the racist assumptions and ill-advised urban planning of city leaders of the times. While interviewing community survivors, the anthropologists note that the name of a particular attorney kept entering the conversation. According to most, the lawyer claimed to be helping the black community fight the removal, but his efforts had the opposite effect. Suspicions remained for over 50 years over who was behind the deception and why. The young anthropologists had to answer these questions before they could open the museum.

Royalties from the Sienna Jacks' novels go to Urban Anthropology's work in creating neighborhood museums and exhibits--up to $12 for each book. For example, all the new exhibits at the Rozga Family's Old South Side Settlement Museum were paid for through sale of these books. The novels are priced at $20 each, or $50 for the entire trilogy. ## Books on Milwaukee Neighborhoods

Strolling through Milwaukee's Ethnic History

By Jill Florence Lackey and Rick Petrie

This latest work provides an "up close and personal" look at local ethnic life by directing readers to the neighborhoods and venues where the groups left their marks. It brings readers directly into their experiences, whether it involves strolling through the neighborhoods they built or participating in contemporary ethnic activities. "Strolling . . . is an intriguing guide to the ethnic history in our midst and a colorful reminder that Milwaukee has always been a city of newcomers." - John Gurda. <http://mecahmilwaukee.com>

Milwaukee, City of Neighborhoods

By John Gurda

Milwaukee: City of Neighborhoods is the most comprehensive account of grassroots Milwaukee ever published. Richly illustrated, engagingly written, and organized for maximum ease of use, the book is a fine-grained introduction to the Milwaukee community, and its communities, that will endure as a standard work for years to come. <https://historicmilwaukee.org/milwaukee-city-of-neighborhoods/>.

Milwaukee's Brady Street Neighborhood

By Frank D. Alioto

Milwaukee's Brady Street neighborhood began in the mid-19th century as a crossroads between middle-class Yankees from the east and early German settlers. Polish and Italian immigrants soon followed, working the mills, tanneries, and brewers that lined the riverbank. The hippies arrived in the 1960s. By the 1980s the area fell into blight, neglect and decay. Now, a true model for new urbanism, the Brady Street neighborhood is the midst of a renaissance. <https://www.arcadiapublishing.com/Products/9780738551746>

Milwaukee's Bronzeville: 1900-1950

By Paul H. Geenen, Introduction by Rueben Harpole

With the migration of African American sharecroppers to northern cities in the first half of the 20th century, the African American population of Milwaukee grew from fewer than 1,000 in 1900 to nearly 22,000 by 1950. Most settled along Walnut Street, an area that came to be known as Milwaukee's Bronzeville, a thriving residential, business, and entertainment community. Bronzeville is remembered by African American elders as a good place to grow up. <https://www.arcadiapublishing.com/Products/9780738540610>

Milwaukee's Old South Side
By Jill Florence Lackey and Rick Petrie

In the late 1800s, the Old South Side was developed by immigrant Poles, who became the dominant population for over 100 years. While other Milwaukee ethnic neighborhoods gradually dissipated in the mid-20th century because of assimilation pressures, freeway building, or urban renewal programs, the Old South Side remained solidly Polish. A survey nearly a half century later revealed that people of 110 national backgrounds now lived in the Old South Side, with the three largest groups being Mexicans, Poles, and American Indians. <https://www.arcadiapublishing.com/Products/9780738590691>
